

Artistic flair

When it comes to choosing a piece of artwork for your home it pays to consider the use of each room, says Naomi Pound, design director at developers Kersfield, whose Lansdown Fields showhome is now open. "Some artists have a noisy energy to their style and their work often fits well within busy environments such as kitchens and living area," said Naomi who worked with the Bath Contemporary gallery. "As you would expect, quieter pieces work better in rooms where you might want to create a calmer setting, such as bedrooms and bathrooms."
